many good and bad features.
While the design is getting more and more good, performance is getting a bit bad. Today, I will introduce to you a browser that works with one or two tab, and looks like the Windows version. Web Site Discussion: All web sites are not created equal. Only a handful of these sites will drive you to the site's real focus. Use the internet to find these sites. With the increasing frequency of cross-infection from web sites to other web sites, you should be aware of the risks. Malware infections are no longer limited to the Windows-based personal computer or laptop, and increasingly are finding their way onto the palmtop and other portable computing devices. Malware can spread very rapidly, both within a single computer, and across a network, usually by sending a “worm” or virus from one computer to another.

Malware can be disguised as free software, or even look like a legitimate application. The best antidote against this is to use anti-virus software. In addition, a firewall can provide a degree of protection. The industry is developing anti-malware software, such as Symantec's Norton AntiVirus, to be effective against these types of viruses. However, more often than not, we end up with two fundamental problems: We want good security (but not too much!)

We want our Internet access to be fast For some users, the better is the enemy of the good. For these users, we
