This study aimed to explore the relationship between the oropharyngeal swallowing dysfunction and gastrointestinal symptoms in the elderly. This was a case-control study of 100 participants, 50 of whom were elderly subjects with no history of swallowing dysfunction, and 50 were elderly subjects with a history of swallowing dysfunction. The elderly with swallowing dysfunction were divided into three groups according to the type of swallowing dysfunction: oral-motor-phase dysfunction, pharyngeal-phase dysfunction, and oral-phase dysfunction. The elderly without swallowing dysfunction were divided into two groups according to the presence or absence of gastrointestinal symptoms. The gastrointestinal symptoms were assessed using the Geriatric Functional System and the Geriatric Oral-Dental Health-Related Quality of Life instruments. Elderly subjects with swallowing dysfunction had more gastrointestinal symptoms than the control group. There was no significant difference in the Geriatric Functional System scores between elderly subjects with swallowing dysfunction and elderly subjects without swallowing dysfunction. The Geriatric Oral-Dental Health-Related Quality of Life scores were significantly lower in the elderly with swallowing dysfunction than the control group. There was no significant difference in the Geriatric Oral-Dental Health-Related Quality f988f36e3a
