"The other puzzle I didn't understand (when I first read Photoshop P30), was the difference in interfaces – I ended up duplicating my existing workflows and ideas to learn about them."
- Rick Gleason I used to say that only having a mouse meant I could only work in an office. If I had a laptop I would sit on my bed and use it to create. Why not a tablet? Now I can just do it on the couch, or in the bathroom, or in the car, or at the movies. "I spent ages making a small throwaway one off piece of art. Then I shared it on Instagram and told friends I was proud of myself. I put a lot of effort into it, and then I started planning what I could do with it – frame it, print it. Then I learnt about Giga and Printable. I look around me in my home and see photos everywhere. Then I realised I might have something to say about some of them. I could convert them. I'm going to create new things, I'm going to create new worlds." "Eye-tracking technology is another way to tell apart the best Mac apps from the rest, and he said AirPort's latest version of the iPad Air 2 would ship soon. He said the ability to track and sync multiple users' iPad Air 2 would come first, with the free app, which also includes Apple's location- and activity-tracking software, following." I'm not at all an expert when it comes to photography, but I love DPreview. I found it pretty easy to pick up and play with a lot of things and try out different techniques. But as in most things, you get better the more you do it. And with time, you don't tire of just playing around with DPreview.
