It was established as the Supreme Council of the Republic of Belarus in October 1990 and was redefined in the 1990 Constitution of Belarus. The deputies to the National Assembly are elected every four years. It also has an external relations department that serves as Belarus' diplomatic representative to the World Trade Organization. The chief executive of the Republic is the President of Belarus, elected by the electorate through open ballot. The current president is Alexander Lukashenko. The president can dissolve the parliament in a vote of no confidence. The president heads the government, consisting of at least twenty ministers of state. Each of these can submit a legislative proposal and must be discussed in parliament. The chancellor is an honorary position, nominated by the parliament, and has no political power.
